Now that you have finished, consider sharing your answers with your partner or spouse. If your partner or spouse has done this as well, you might ask him/her to share with you. Remember that you may not want the same things. That is common. You might spend some time sharing with one another about why the desire is important or not important to you. When talking about your relationship with your partner or spouse always practice "active listening." This involves listening carefully to what your partner or spouse is saying, but refraining from criticizing their thoughts or feelings.
